Summary

In October 2015, the OECD published the reports on the base erosion and profit shifting (BEPS) project's action plan. The report on Action 14 contains measures to make dispute resolution mechanisms more effective with the goal of avoiding double taxation insofar as possible. Those measures are particularly important because they provide taxpayers with greater legal certainty in an area where numerous changes in domestic and international tax rules are taking place. Switzerland considers that mutual agreement procedures are an important element, which allow taxpayers to benefit fully from Swiss double taxation agreements. Switzerland is thus committed to continuing its efforts to improve the implementation of mutual agreement procedures and consequently further enhancing the appeal of Switzerland as a business location.

In a bid to improve implementation of mutual agreement procedures, Action 14 has given the member states of the OECD Inclusive Framework<sup>1</sup> a target of concluding their mutual agreement procedures in 24 months on average. The rules concerning statistics on mutual agreement procedures have been modified to check that this ambitious target of speeding up the conclusion of mutual agreement procedures is pursued by the states. The summary statistics that were previously submitted to the OECD by its member states and published by the OECD on its website have been replaced by very detailed statistics on the implementation of mutual agreement procedures.

Switzerland submitted the 2016 statistical data in accordance with the new standard to the OECD in the beginning of July 2017. These latter were published on the OECD website<sup>2</sup> on November 27, 2017, along with statistics from other members of the inclusive framework. .

According to the statistics provided by Switzerland to the OECD concerning mutual agreement procedures, the average time taken for the procedures completed in Switzerland in 2016 was 21 months (26 months for transfer pricing and 15 months for other mutual agreement procedures). Switzerland is thus meeting the commitments made to improving the duration of dispute resolution.

Switzerland's competent authorities are committed to maintaining the good results achieved and to investing the necessary resources to further improve dispute resolution mechanisms and thereby to enhance the appeal of Switzerland as a business location.

1 Background

Switzerland has concluded double taxation agreements (DTAs) with numerous countries which can be found on the website of the Confederation. If double taxation nevertheless occurs with a country with which Switzerland has signed a DTA or if there is a risk of such double taxation occurring, taxpayers resident in Switzerland can ask the State Secretariat for International Financial Matters (SIF) in the Federal Department of Finance in Bern<sup>3</sup> to initiate a mutual agreement procedure.

In October 2015, the OECD published the reports on the base erosion and profit shifting (BEPS) project's action plan. The report on Action 14 contains measures to make dispute resolution mechanisms more effective with the goal of avoiding double taxation insofar as possible. This measure is particularly important since it provides taxpayers with greater legal certainty in an area where numerous changes in domestic and international tax rules are taking place.

In a bid to improve implementation of mutual agreement procedures, Action 14 has given the member states of the OECD Inclusive Framework<sup>4</sup> a target of concluding their mutual agreement procedures in 24 months on average. To check that this ambitious target is pursued by the states, the rules concerning statistics on mutual agreement procedures have been modified. The summary statistics which, up to now, have been submitted to the OECD by the member states and published by the OECD on its website, have been replaced by very detailed statistics on the implementation of the mutual agreement procedures.

The new statistics specifications were elaborated in the first half of 2016 and adopted in the summer of 2016. Amongst the numerous changes introduced compared to the statistics, which were published previously, the main ones are listed below:

- A distinction is now made between two types of cases involved: those that begin as from 1 January 2016 and for which detailed information must be provided and those that started before 1 January 2016 for which limited information is sufficient. This artificial distinction is due to the fact that it was considered that the member states in the OECD Inclusive Framework should not be obliged to supply detailed information on procedures which started before the new rules on statistics were even known and thus before the states could gather the detailed information needed for the statistics.
- Transfer pricing cases are disclosed separately from the other cases. This makes it possible to obtain detailed information specific to this type of mutual agreement procedure, which has been increasing in importance in recent years.
- The duration of the mutual agreement procedure also features in the new statistics. To allow a comparison to be made of the statistical data between the different countries of the inclusive framework, the OECD has published clear guidelines for calculating data for mutual agreement procedures from 2016.
- For Switzerland and numerous other countries, the new rules have resulted in a significant and purely statistical increase in the number of cases recorded in the inventory (e.g. one case involving five companies from the same group will now be recorded as five separate cases in the new system).

All of the changes introduced in 2016 make it impossible to compare the statistics previously published by Switzerland and the other countries with the current statistics in accordance with the new standard. However, a comparison among countries of the OECD Inclusive Framework should be possible for 2016 and subsequent years.

2 Swiss statistics concerning mutual agreement procedures in accordance with the OECD standard

This chapter outlines some interesting points concerning the statistics supplied by Switzerland to the OECD.

Switzerland submitted the 2016 statistical data to the OECD in the beginning of July 2017. This data should be published on the OECD website and be accessible to the public in the course of 2017, accompanied by statistics from the other member states of the OECD Inclusive Framework.

The statistics required by the OECD are presented in the form of four tables, which do not take advance pricing agreements (APAs) into account.

- Table of cases started before 1 January 2016, pre-2016 cases (table 1).
- Table of cases started as from 1 January 2016, post-2015 cases (table 2).
- Table on the average time required to conclude procedures opened before 1 January 2016, pre-2016 cases (Table 3).
- Table on the average time required to conclude procedures opened as from 1 January 2016, post-2015 cases (Table 4).

These tables can be found in the annexes to this report. The key elements of these tables are as follows:

- The mutual agreement procedures which were initiated before 1 January 2016 and which were completed in 2016 lasted on average 25 months, i.e. 31 months for the mutual agreement procedures concerning transfer pricing and 19 months for the other types of mutual agreement procedures.
- The mutual agreement procedures which were initiated as from 1 January 2016 and which were completed in 2016 lasted on average 2 months for all case types. However, this statistic takes into account only a few number of short procedures that have been opened and closed in 2016.

Switzerland's competent authorities are committed to maintaining the good results achieved and to investing the necessary resources to further improve dispute resolution mechanisms and thereby to enhance the appeal of Switzerland as a business location.

3 Swiss statistics 2016 – selected questions

This chapter presents a selection of various Swiss statistics in greater detail.

3.1 Statistics on mutual agreements procedures concerning transfer pricing and APAs

A transfer pricing case (attribution/allocation MAP cases) is one where the taxpayer's request for the mutual agreement procedure concerns either the attribution of profits to a permanent establishment (see Article 7 of the OECD Model Tax Convention); or the determination of profits between affiliated companies (see Article 9 of the OECD Model Tax Convention).

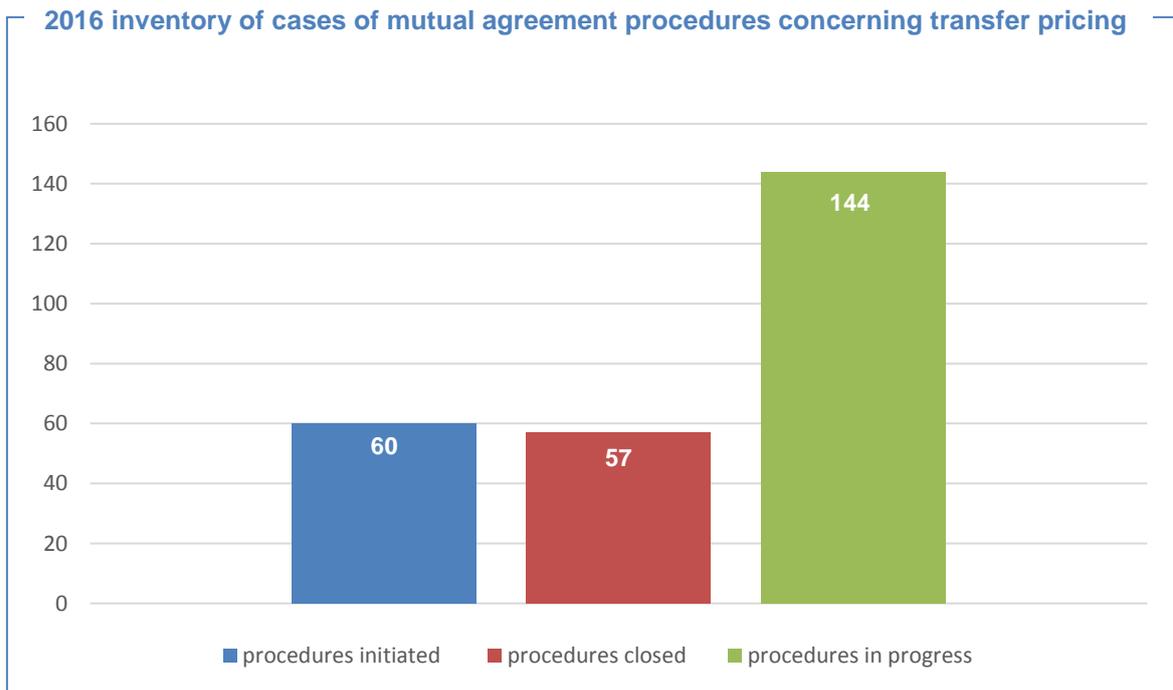

In transfer pricing cases, a distinction is made between:

- mutual agreement procedures to eliminate double taxation that has already occurred or to prevent imminent double taxation (hereafter "mutual agreement procedure concerning transfer pricing"), (3.1.1) and
- mutual agreement procedures to avoid double taxation. Typically, a multinational wants the pricing of transactions between group companies to be determined in advance in the form of an advance pricing agreement (hereafter "APA"). These are mainly bilateral or multilateral rulings (3.1.2).

3.1.1 Mutual agreement procedures concerning transfer pricing

The aim of mutual agreement procedures concerning transfer pricing is to eliminate double taxation that has already occurred or to prevent imminent double taxation. These are the same procedures as those mentioned in the OECD statistics (attribution/allocation cases). However, no distinction is made here between cases initiated before or after 1 January 2016.

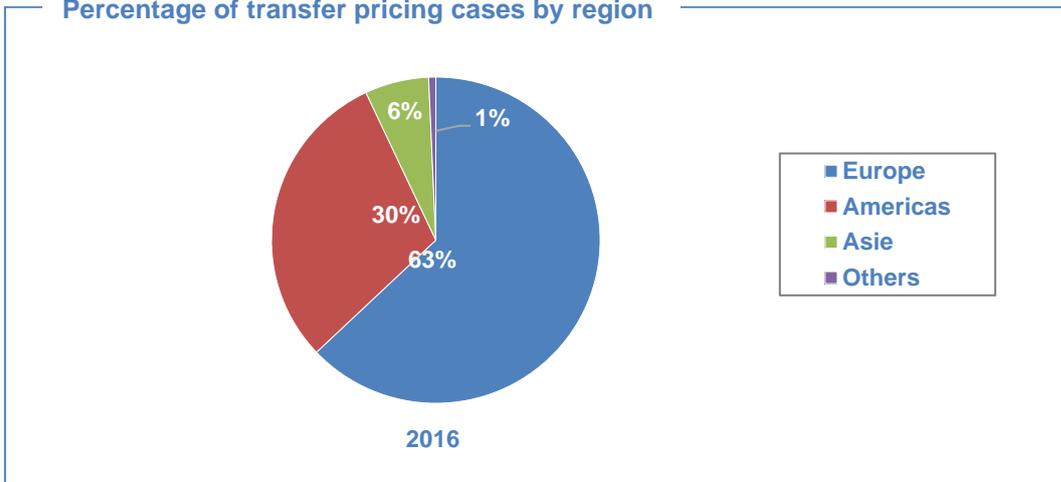

In 2016, 60 mutual agreement procedures concerning transfer pricing were initiated and 57 cases were closed, taking the inventory of cases under way as at 31 December 2016 to 144 cases.

The duration of these procedures varies considerably from one case to the next. In certain cases closed in 2016, the duration was as short as 12 days. On average, however, the mutual agreement procedures concerning transfer pricing cases closed in 2016 lasted 26 months.

The majority of cases in progress in 2016 concerned European partner countries, followed by countries in the Americas as a whole.

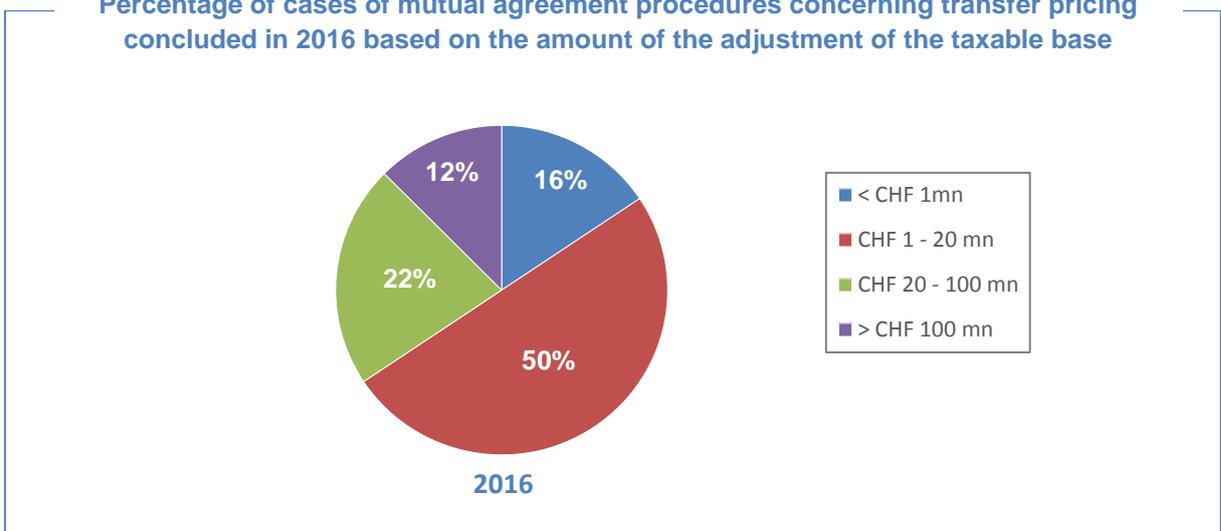

Percentage of transfer pricing cases by region

The cases of mutual agreement procedures concerning transfer pricing generally consist of an adjustment carried out by the tax authorities of a country which increases the taxable base and thereby the amount of tax to be paid by a company. It is the amount of this initial adjustment of the taxable base which is the issue in the negotiations during a mutual agreement procedure. The amount of additional tax resulting from this initial adjustment then depends on the tax rate of the company targeted. To eliminate the double taxation that results from a taxable base adjustment of this nature, the countries seek to reach an agreement on the amount of the adjustment in line with international standards within the context of the mutual agreement procedure on this matter. Following such an agreement, the first country will correct its initial adjustment and the second country will proceed with the corresponding adjustment to eliminate double taxation.

It is interesting to note that the amounts of the initial adjustments concerning cases closed in 2016 vary greatly from case to case but that the vast majority of the cases concern initial adjustments of the taxable base of less than CHF 20 million.

3.1.2 Statistics on advance pricing agreements (APAs)

APAs are mutual agreement procedures in connection with transfer pricing to avoid double taxation. These are mainly bilateral or multilateral rulings. These mutual agreement procedure cases are not included in the OECD statistics framework..

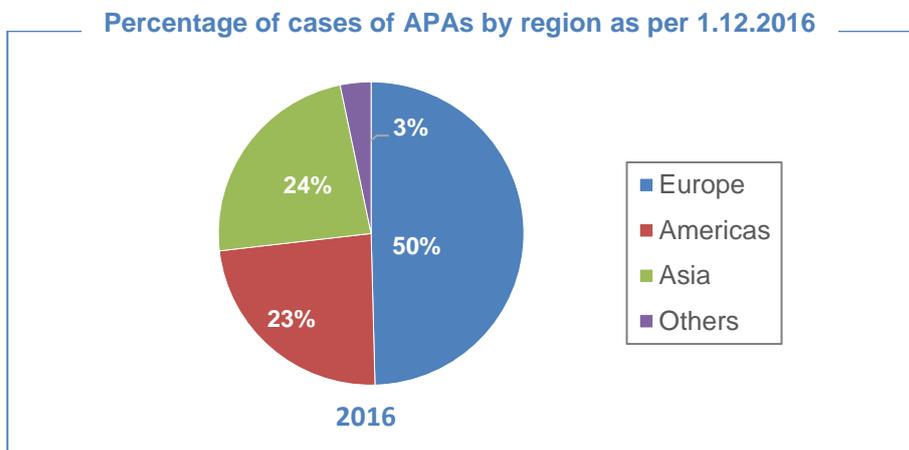

In 2016, 44 procedures were initiated and 35 procedures were closed, taking the inventory of cases in progress as at 31 December 2016 to 123.

The duration of APAs varies greatly from one case to another. In certain cases closed in 2016, the duration was as short as 1 month. On average, however, the mutual agreement procedures concerning APAs which were closed in 2016 lasted 43 months.

Although there is no OECD obligation in terms of duration for APAs, Switzerland believes that such procedures are essential for legal certainty and the appeal of Switzerland as a business location. Switzerland thus strives to accelerate the processing of such procedures while at the same time putting a priority on achieving the best possible results in each case.

The majority of the APAs in progress in 2016 concern European partner countries. Asia is in second place here even though it is a region of minimal importance concerning the other types of mutual agreement procedures.

3.2 Statistics concerning all mutual agreement procedures excluding transfer pricing

The other types of mutual agreement procedure (non TP, i.e. other cases ) concern all mutual agreement procedures based on a double taxation agreement, excluding cases dealing with transfer pricing<sup>5</sup>. It is mainly about residency of individuals, the right of taxation for dependent personal services, the differentiation between dependent and independent personal services and income from government services.

In 2016, 89 procedures were initiated and 44 procedures were closed, taking the inventory of cases in progress as at 31 December 2016 to 207.

2016 inventory of cases of mutual agreement procedures excluding transfer pricing

The duration of mutual agreement procedures excluding transfer pricing varies considerably from one case to the next. It was noted that in certain cases closed in 2016, the duration was as short as 14 days. On average, however, the mutual agreement procedures excluding transfer pricing which were closed in 2016 lasted 15 months. Almost all cases in progress in 2016 concern European partner countries.

<sup>5</sup> A transfer pricing case (attribution/allocation MAP cases) is one where the taxpayer's request for the mutual agreement procedure concerns the attribution of profits to a permanent establishment (see Article 7 of the OECD Model Tax Convention); or the determination of profits between affiliated companies (see Article 9 of the OECD Model Tax Convention).

3.3 Total statistics

The total statistics below concern all of the mutual agreement procedures mentioned previously (including APAs).

In 2016, 191 cases were initiated and 136 cases were closed, taking the inventory of cases in progress to 472. On average, the mutual agreement procedures which were closed in 2016 lasted 27 months.

Overall, the vast majority of the cases in progress as at 31 December 2016 concerned European partner countries.

4 Conclusions

The commitment made by the member states of the OECD Inclusive Framework to improve dispute resolution mechanisms and in particular the commitment to achieve an average duration of 24 months for mutual agreement procedures is a welcome development where taxpayers are confronted with numerous changes in domestic and international tax rules. Speeding up the mutual agreements procedures based on DTAs is moving towards legal certainty and the elimination of double taxation.

Switzerland is delighted that it was able to meet its international commitments in 2016 by resolving Swiss mutual agreement procedures (excluding APAs) in less than 24 months and it will make every effort to maintain this result in the coming years whilst continuing to place a priority on the quality of the results achieved.
